Jane, I treasure you, please treasure me. If you can not find love in your heart for me to honor me, respect me, reverence me, then we should pray fervently for mercy from God, as this will doom our relationship should it continue. There is only one reason that I know of to argue with me when I express a decision; that is if the decision goes against the will of God and His Word. If it doesn't, then just as I've treated you, I wish to be treated with love and respect. If you disagree with a decision I express, then in a calm and respectful way, state the reason you disagree with my decision, I will then decide what to do based on that, but if it isn't going to kill us, if it in fact makes our life a little easier and at very little expense to us, then please choose to celebrate the decision instead of fight me on it. Even though I will honor my vow, your continual rebellious practice on even very small decisions I make is dramatically affecting the way I feel about you. It is causing me to think less of you, to think you're not as intelligent, to think you don't really care about me, and to think that I am losing respect for you as a result. If any part of you truly does care and love me, then you must make a serious effort to stop arguing with me about rather insignificant matters. I can not recall ever saying no to you about anything. My patience has run out altogether with your continual disrespect of my ideas and concerns and how I choose to spend hard earned wages while you wantonly make spending decisions on a regular basis and tell me I've got nothing to do the same. You will not rule over me ever, we will walk together making decisions together as harmoniously as possible loving one another. But should the occasion arise and you disagree with me and I make a final decision you're not in agreement with, and it doesn't kill us, bankrupt us, or against God's Word, you're going to have to learn to accept it. If you can't, I will honor my vow, but your unwillingness to be my wife will cause unfortunate consequences between us and my feelings of love honor, respect to diminish toward you. I believe you are the most precious blessing (next to GOD himself) that I've been given from Heaven, but this must stop.
